SALT-RISING BREAD AND SOME COMPARISONS WITH BREAD MADE WITH YEAST (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Salt-Rising Bread and Some Comparisons With Bread Made With Yeast Bread is made light and porous by two methods of aeration. The oldest of these and the one, which is most extensively used at present, involves a process of fermentation, in which various microorganisms produce the gas necessary to raise the bread; by the other method it is given a porous character, either by forcing carbon dioxide under pressure into the dough while it is being mixed, as is done in making aerated bread, or by mixing with the other ingredients certain chemicals, which, when they come in contact with the water used in making the dough, evolve gas, either immediately upon mixing the bread or later when it becomes hot during the process of baking. The method of preparing bread with the aid of yeast has been extensively investigated and the function of this microorganism in bread is now thoroughly understood. By means of the saccharifying enzyme, diastase, which is present in flour, a part of the starch is converted into sugar, which as well as that normally present in flours and that added in making the dough either as sugar in some form or other, or malt extract, is partly converted by the yeast into alcohol and carbon dioxide which aerates the bread. Another type of bread, involving a process of fermentation, the so-called salt-rising bread, is made by many housewives and bakers, particularly in the south and is not so thoroughly understood and offers far greater difficulties in its preparation. In its preparation there is added neither yeast nor a portion of fermented dough from the previous baking, as is done in...
