By Charlsie Russell

Loblolly Writer's House. Paperback. Book Condition: New. na (illustrator). Paperback. 310 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.0in. Charlsie Russells newest novel is a romantic mystery set against the founding of the Mississippi Gulf Coasts premier port city, Gulfport, at the close of the 19th century. In 1897, the grand old man Lionel Augustus dies and, much to the chagrin of his greedy siblings, leaves the bulk of his significant estate to his illegitimate son and beloved step-daughter, with one stipulation: they wed. For reasons of their own, the two agree to marry, sight unseen, but only days after her marriage by proxy to Deputy Sheriff Clay Boudreaux of Galveston County, Texas, Olivia Lee learns her husband has died in a house fire and her extended family intends to contest the will. Exacerbating her situation, a stranger, claiming to be the dead Clay, but who her family warns is Clays older brother Troy, invades Olivias opulent home and accuses her of hiring Troy to kill Clay. . . and yet another henchman to eliminate Clays killer. Olivia and the invader, whoever he might be, have sound reasons for confusing their roles in the plot to murder Clay Boudreaux, reasons dealing with...
